Internet search advertising is an online marketing strategy in which businesses and advertisers pay to display ads on search engine results pages. When users enter specific keywords to search, these ads will appear at the top, bottom or sidebar of the search results, giving them a prominent position to gain more exposure and click opportunities. The main form of this type of advertising is pay-per-click (PPC), which means advertisers only pay when users click on the ad. The delivery of search ads is usually based on a bidding mechanism. Advertisers set bids based on the degree of competition of keywords and user search intentions, thereby affecting the location and frequency of ad display. Through precise keyword selection and positioning, search advertising can effectively reach potential customers and increase brand awareness and conversion rate. At the same time, advertisers can use the analysis tools provided by search engines to monitor advertising performance and adjust strategies in real time to optimize return on investment.
