Summary

Global Markets Direct's latest Pharmaceutical and Healthcare disease pipeline guide Fabry Disease - Pipeline Review, H2 2020, provides an overview of the Fabry Disease (Genetic Disorders) pipeline landscape.

Fabry disease is an X-linked lysosomal disorder that results in abnormal deposits of globotriaosylceramide in blood vessel walls throughout the body. It is caused due to mutations in GLA gene. The GLA gene controls the production of a particular enzyme called alpha-galactosidase A (this enzyme is responsible for breaking down of globotriaosylceramide). Symptoms include skin rash, cramps, gas, diarrhea, heart enlargement, angina, dizziness, headache, nausea, and heat intolerance. Treatment includes enzyme replacement therapy (ERT) and pain management.
