Abstracts

Years of economic sanctions and ineffective management have pushed Myanmar's furniture industry to severe underdevelopment. Unable to keep profitability up as a result of these difficulties, many suppliers have stopped exporting or shut down altogether in recent years.

Reforms to the country's political and economic systems, however, are expected to reverse the status quo. Changing to a democratic form of government, the nation has benefited from eased restrictions and is confident of attracting an influx of fresh capital from foreign investors within the next few years.

These developments are also seen to favorably affect the furniture sector as makers are expected to be granted entry once again to key markets in the West. The removal of impediments to the local use of the US dollar is also regarded as a boost to the industry.

This report focuses on the main types of furniture from Myanmar – living room, bedroom, dining and kitchen, and outdoor pieces.
