Report Overview

Remarkable growth highlights the development of the fashion bags industry in Indonesia. Exports in recent years have risen significantly as a result of burgeoning demand from established and emerging markets.

The sector's progress is attributed to several factors, chief of which is the gradual recovery of the US economy. An increasing number of buyers from alternative destinations are also driving up revenue as Indonesia's reputation as a viable alternative sourcing center to China becomes prevalent.

The industry benefits from a number of strengths that help in its development. One of these is the widespread availability of most natural materials obtained from plants and marine life. Another competitive edge is the high level of workmanship used by companies, which commonly farm out several manufacturing and design processes to craftsmen.

This report focuses on the main types of fashion bags – handbags, shoulder bags, tote bags, and wallets & purses.

This Indonesia Sourcing Report is part of the Developing Country Sourcing Report series designed to provide buyers with information on new products from export manufacturers in Southeast Asia that specialize in handmade merchandise.
