Abstracts

The global animal euthanasia market size was estimated at USD 1.58 billion in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 2.68 billion by 2033, growing at a CAGR of 6.47% from 2025 to 2033. The market is experiencing growth driven by increasing pet ownership, demand for humane end-of-life care, and the need for disease control in both companion and livestock animals.

Growing awareness of ethical euthanasia practices and the expansion of mobile and in-clinic veterinary services further fuel the growth. One of the primary factors driving the demand for animal euthanasia services is overcrowding in shelters. Many shelters operate with limited space and financial resources, making it difficult to care for large numbers of stray or surrendered animals. As a result, euthanasia is often used as a last resort when adoption or rehoming is not feasible. According to the ASPCA, an estimated 920,000 dogs and cats are euthanized annually in U.S. shelters, including about 390,000 dogs and 530,000 cats, mainly due to overpopulation and limited capacity.

Additionally, the growth of the animal euthanasia industry is also driven by the rising pet ownership, increasing awareness of humane end-of-life care, and the need for disease control in both companion and livestock animals. For instance, in January 2025, Memphis Animal Services (MAS) euthanized nearly 100 dogs following a canine distemper outbreak traced to a litter of puppies, closing the shelter until further notice to contain the virus and protect both animals and the community. Such large-scale, disease-driven euthanasia events highlight the critical role of shelter medicine and emergency protocols, potentially increasing demand for veterinary euthanasia drugs, mobile euthanasia services, and disease-prevention measures.
