Abstracts

The global dental pliers market size was valued at USD 618.9 million in 2025 and is projected to reach USD 1,085.4 million by 2033, growing at a CAGR of 7.3% from 2026 to 2033. The industry is experiencing steady growth, driven by the increasing global demand for dental procedures and oral healthcare services.

Also, this growth is due to the rising prevalence of dental disorders, including tooth decay, periodontal diseases, and malocclusion. These conditions require timely clinical intervention, often involving the use of specialized instruments such as dental pliers. As the burden of oral diseases continues to increase across both developed and developing regions, the need for efficient, precise dental tools is also growing.

The high volume of tooth extractions significantly contributes to market growth, as dental pliers are essential instruments for gripping and removing teeth during extractions. The growing incidence of wisdom tooth complications and severe dental infections is further increasing the need for such procedures. For instance, in the UK, as per the table below, from 2021 to 2024, total tooth extractions increased sharply from 22,549 to 49,112, more than doubling as dental services resumed post-disruption. Tooth decay extractions rose from 14,645 to 30,587, while non-tooth decay extractions increased from 7,904 to 18,525, indicating a strong recovery in both essential and elective procedures. This significant rise in extraction volumes directly supports higher demand for dental pliers, as they are critical tools in such procedures.
