The North America travel bags market is expected to be valued at USD 15.28 billion by 2025, according to a new report by Grand View Research, Inc. The increasing air passenger traffic domestically and growing trend of family trips over weekends, driven by rising disposable incomes, in the region.

In recent years, economic stability and the resultant rise in disposable incomes of the population have led to growth of the travel & tourism industry in the region, with significantly growing trends of domestic travel and family vacations over weekends. The reasonable air fares for domestic travel have also led to increasing traffic of business personnel in air transport, most notably in the U.S.

The short duration of such trips has led to the demand for smaller and convenient travel goods, including bags, such as duffle bags, trolleys, and backpacks. The further growth of the travel industry in the region is expected to have significant impacts on the growth of the travel bags market during the forecast period.

Duffle bag is the largest travel bag segment in 2016 and is anticipated to register a lucrative growth rate over the analysis period. However, prepared trolley bags are anticipated to witness fastest CAGR of 7.1%, from 2017 to 2025.
