Summary

The global oligonucleotide CDMO market size was estimated at USD 911.78 million in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 3,168.97 million by 2033, growing at a CAGR of 14.98% from 2025 to 2033. The market is driven by the rising clinical pipeline of antisense and siRNA therapies, growing adoption of mRNA-based therapeutics beyond vaccines, and increasing outsourcing by biotech firms to reduce manufacturing complexity.

In addition, the increasing number of pipeline of RNA-based and antisense therapeutics is driving the need for specialized manufacturing partners to help them scale production. As these candidates progress into late-stage clinical trials, sponsors encounter capacity constraints and heightened purity requirements, prompting a shift toward experienced contract development and manufacturing organizations (CDMOs) for scalable and compliant production. The need for consistent GMP-grade materials across multiple development phases further strengthens outsourcing trends and supports the steady uptake of contract manufacturing services in this domain.

Furthermore, the growing complexity of oligonucleotide chemistry, which requires sophisticated synthesis platforms and analytical capabilities that many emerging biotech firms cannot develop internally is also contributing to market growth. Several advancements such as conjugated oligos, advanced delivery systems, and long-chain sequences is adding additional technical challenges which is encouraging companies to depend on CDMOs with proven expertise. Thus, technologically advanced providers that can deliver high yield, reduced impurity profiles, and flexible batch scaling are becoming crucial across the development range.
