The rising number of advertising and marketing campaigns is a trend that will contribute to the market growth for online on-demand home services. Presently, vendors in the global market are launching advertisement campaigns through different platforms to generate customer awareness and retain a solid customer base. They have started using multiple strategic marketing tools to gain customers' attention.

The recent outbreak of COVID-19 had an immense effect on the online on-demand home services market. Even though the epidemic damaged the world economy, demand for cloud computing increased due to the pandemic. As a result, significant players took full benefit of the crisis to create ways to reform their business models. There was the rapid growth of the e-commerce platform, which essentially aided the boost in market growth. Further, during the pandemic, a large population was inclined towards digitalization and essentially adopted smartphones, which resulted in high internet penetration. Thus, the market witnessed a heightening requirement even during the pandemic. Hence, the increased demand during the lockdown restrictions has primarily helped the market gain traction.

In August 2022, Amazon planned to add mental health support to its primary-care service. Amazon Care, Amazon's primary-care service, intended to add behavioral health aid to its growing list of medical partners and offerings with Ginger, a mental health care provider. This facility will deliver Amazon Care users on-demand access to mental health professionals, like licensed psychiatrists or therapists. The move would observe the latest expansion of Amazon's nascent primary-care business, which shows on-demand virtual care with the help of an app, uniting people with physicians for immediate care services.
