Secondary Alkane Sulfonate (SAS) is an anionic surfactant, also called paraffine sulfonate. It was synthesized for the first time in 1940 and has been used as surfactant since the 1960ies. SAS is one of the major anionic surfactants used in the market of dishwashing, laundry and cleaning products. Secondary alkane sulfonate (SAS) is an anionic surfactant and was manufactured by sulfoxidation of n-paraffins already in 1940. It was introduced as surfactant in the 1960s. Very good water solubility, high wetting action, pronounced foaming power, excellent grease- and soil dispersing properties make SAS an important surfactant ingredient in detergents especially for dish washing.
