A scanning electron microscope (SEM) is a type of electron microscope that produces images of a sample by scanning the surface with a focused beam of electrons. The electrons interact with atoms in the sample, producing various signals that contain information about the surface topography and composition of the sample. The electron beam is scanned in a raster scan pattern, and the position of the beam is combined with the intensity of the detected signal to produce an image. In the most common SEM mode, secondary electrons emitted by atoms excited by the electron beam are detected using a secondary electron detector (Everhart-Thornley detector). The number of secondary electrons that can be detected, and thus the signal intensity, depends, among other things, on specimen topography. SEM can achieve resolution better than 1 nanometer.Global Tabletop (Desktop & Benchtop) SEM key players include Thermo Fisher Scientific, Hitachi High-Technologies Corporation, Jeol Ltd., Hirox, Delong, etc. Global top five manufacturers hold a share about 75%. Japan is the largest market, with a share about 50%, followed by North America, and Korea, both have a share over 35 percent.In terms of product, Up to 100000X is the largest segment, with a share nearly 50%.
