Abstracts

Abstract:

Before the procedure, dilation of the cervix is performed, and the cavity is inspected for any abnormalities. The procedure can range anywhere from 20 minutes to one hour, depending on the size of the cavity and if there are any endometrial polyps or fibroids present that also need to be removed. While the risk of complications is less with endometrial resection than with a hysterectomy, the failure rate is higher, and up to 20% of cases still have bleeding heavy enough to require further treatment. This technique requires a significant amount of skill and experience to perform safely. This procedure has risks as significant as major surgery, and women can become infertile.
