Abstracts

Abstract:

During this procedure, a small incision is made in the groin, and a small catheter is inserted into the nearby artery. X-ray imaging is used for guiding the catheter through the artery into the uterus. A mixture of minuscule plastic particles and X-ray dye is then injected into the artery, flowing and accumulating in the fibroids and blocking the blood supply. The flow of particles is carefully monitored with the X-ray equipment by watching the flow of dye. This procedure can take anywhere from 40 minutes to three hours to complete. The fibroids shrink and disappear over a period of several months. UFE is a much less invasive way to treat fibroids than a hysterectomy, has a much shorter recovery time and leaves almost no scarring.
