Abstracts

The Japanese market for dental implants is relatively developed and expected to gradually become stagnant. Through the past decade and into the future, the Japanese market for dental implants demonstrates fluctuating trends driven by negative press and policy measures. In terms of implants per capita, Japan falls behind South Korea, and is similar to Australia. With a significantly high national income per capita level, the Japanese market demonstrates a preference for premium implant products. Consequently, the dental implant market is dominated by international premium brands, with little room for discounted companies to compete.
