Abstracts

In 2008 the U.S. laminoplasty market was valued at $65.3 million, representing an increase of 9.5% over 2007. The market is predicted to continue growing over the forecast period. Future growth will be driven by the advantages laminoplasty offers over the alternatives, most notably, that laminoplasty maintains spinal alignment and very often aids in preserving motion in the cervical region. In 2008, the average selling price increased with predictions of further increases over the forecast period.
