Abstracts

Mexico vaccine market size reached USD 1.2 Billion in 2025. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the market to reach USD 1.9 Billion by 2034, exhibiting a growth rate (CAGR) of 5.45% during 2026-2034. The growing focus on geriatric immunization, rising prevalence of chronic diseases, and increasing utilization of adjuvants to improve the immune response, particularly for diseases that are more prevalent, represent some of the key factors driving the market.

A vaccine is a biological preparation providing immunity against various infectious diseases. It consists of agents resembling a microorganism causing disease and is often created from weakened or killed variants of the microbe, its toxins, or one of its surface proteins. It is typically administered through needle injections, and some can be given by mouth. It comes in several types, which include live attenuated, inactivated, subunit, recombinant, polysaccharide, and conjugate, each employing different strategies to elicit an immune response. It aids in preventing disease outbreaks, reduces healthcare costs, increasing life expectancy, promoting herd immunity, and improving quality of life by protecting individuals and communities from infectious diseases. It also supports the idea of herd immunity, which is the prevention of disease spread by immunizing a significant portion of a community while shielding the unvaccinated.

Mexico Vaccine Market Trends:

At present, there is a rise in the number of public immunization programs to enhance disease prevention. This, coupled with a significant focus on children who are more susceptible to infectious diseases, represents one of the crucial factors impelling the market growth in Mexico. Furthermore, rising incidences of vaccine-preventable diseases is fueling the urgency for comprehensive immunization coverage. This concern is also increasing awareness among the public, leading to higher vaccination rates. Additionally, the growing collaborations between regulatory bodies, health organizations, and vaccine manufacturers are facilitating the development of new and improved vaccines tailored to the needs of the population. These collaborations are also contributing to the establishment of advanced cold chain systems that are essential for the proper storage and distribution of vaccines, ensuring they retain their efficacy. Besides this, the rising adoption of new vaccine technologies, such as messenger ribonucleic acid (mRNA) and vector-based vaccines, are offering enhanced protection with fewer side effects. In addition, the increasing utilization of adjuvants in vaccines to improve the immune response, particularly for diseases that are more prevalent, and enhance the efficacy of vaccines, thus optimizing immunization campaigns is contributing to the growth of the market in the country. Apart from this, the growing employment of electronic health records (EHRs) and tracking systems for vaccination is facilitating better monitoring of immunization rates and vaccine effectiveness, leading to more informed public health strategies and vaccine stock management. Moreover, the rising implementation of favorable healthcare policy reforms that support fast-tracking vaccine approval processes and simplifying administrative procedures for vaccine procurement are pivotal in accelerating the availability of vaccines.
