A paper cup is a disposable cup which is generally coated with wax or plastic to prevent liquid from leaking out or soaking through the paper. It is exposed to high heat during the manufacturing process for killing harmful bacteria and making it sterile. On account of hectic lifestyles and long working hours, consumers are shifting towards paper cups as they save their time. This, along with the rising trend of takeaway services, is catalyzing the demand for paper cups in North America.

The North America paper cups market is currently being driven by several factors. The rising environmental concerns have replaced the non-biodegradable plastic cups with the paper cups across the region. Consequently, the overall sales of paper cups are increasing in the region. Moreover, the escalating health awareness among consumers has stimulated the utilization of paper cups as a hygienic reusable option than their counterparts such as plastic and foam.
