lifestyles and increasing inclination towards knowing and experiencing various foods has resulted in the growth of the demand for spices. Emerging new and various flavors in respect to the shifting consumer preferences are prominent for the spice extract producers. Spices are mostly used extracts among the other sources of botanical extracts.

On the bases of form, the market has been bifurcated into powder and liquid. The powder of botanical extracts is mostly used in various applications which include bakeries & confectionaries, meat and sauces, & dressing among others to make out the required aroma and taste and offer health benefits. These extracts are much stable over liquid form and have more shelf life. Owing to the benefits of this form, powdered segment is holding a major share in the market and is anticipated to remain dominant in the forecasted years.

As per the application, the botanical extracts are majorly applicable in food. Since, the demand for bakery products is been rising with the increase in the trend of convenient food consumption. With the increase in the demand for bakery and confectionery products, along with the rising preferences for organic flavoring agents, the market for botanical extracts in this sector is prominent. Since botanical extracts are absolutely organic, their “clean label” enables high preference by consumers who are moderately inclining towards natural products.

According to the geographical analysis, the North America region is occupying the maximum botanical extracts market share. Owing to the primary factor propelling the growth of the market is the growing consumption of dietary supplements is in this region.
