Overview: Global Video Surveillance Market

Video surveillance is an integral part of the security industry that assists in the protection of assets, facilities, and individuals. The video surveillance industry is around 30 years old and has witnessed a series of technological changes in terms of camera technology, content delivery, and transmission modes. Currently, the market for video surveillance is driven by increasing private & public security concerns along with the technology shift and changing business models. Earlier, only large entities were able to afford IP video surveillance; but due to the declining price of IP cameras and the proliferation of IP networks, the video surveillance industry is rapidly moving out from analog to IP network surveillance infrastructure as IP surveillance enhances the traditional monitoring and post-event investigation practices.

In recent years, video surveillance is expanding beyond the traditional practice of monitoring only the critical infrastructure. The growing focus on integrating next-generation technologies, i.e., deep learning, analytics, AI, and cloud computing, is considerably increasing the scope of video surveillance applications – traffic monitoring, people-count, facial recognition, posture detection, heat map, post-forensic analytics, and lot more.

Few of the key factors driving the growth of the global video surveillance market include:

- (1) Increasing investment to improve city surveillance
- (2) Rising interest in intelligent video surveillance solutions
- (3) Increasing penetration of IP cameras

Artificial intelligence (AI) technology is rapidly proliferating across industries. Advancements in AI technology and growing interest in integrating AI with video surveillance systems are certainly hybridizing the landscape of the video surveillance market. Integrating AI in surveillance applications in combination with the power of deep learning techniques helps to identify individuals, patterns, and trends across thousands of geolocation. Moving forward, AI and deep learning technology will become the foundations of modern surveillance systems. These systems are equipped to capture the unique features of the human face in real-time, make a comparison with the central database, and trigger an alarm when it detects the specific face of concern. These systems enable monitoring real-time data against specific parameters, i.e., real-time watchlist detection, which will automate and enhance city surveillance practices.

Currently, China dominates the global video surveillance market with the incorporation of advanced facial recognition powered by AI in surveillance applications, and the adoption is expected to spread across other countries. The increasing penetration of AI in surveillance applications is anticipated to increase the demand for front- and back-end surveillance devices with advanced functionalities in the coming years. Few of the prominent companies offering AI technologies for surveillance applications include Huawei, Hikvision, Dahua, ZTE, NEC Corporation, IBM, Palantir, and Cisco.

Market Segmentation: Global Video Surveillance Market

The global video surveillance market is segmented based on components, end-users, and regions. In terms of hardware components analysis, network security cameras dominated in 2018, contributing to XX% of the total hardware market share and is anticipated to remain dominant throughout the forecast period. This is mainly due to the increasing preference for video surveillance solutions with remote monitoring capabilities. Also, the penetration of network cameras is expected to increase significantly during the forecast period. In terms of end-user analysis, the commercial segment dominated with more than XX% of the market share in 2018 and the trend is likely to continue during the forecast period. The residential segment is identified as the fastest-growing segment, i.e., CAGR of 18.0%, during the forecast period 2019–2025.

Regional Outlook: Global Video Surveillance Market

The global video surveillance market is segmented in the regions of Asia Pacific, Americas, Europe, and Middle East & Africa. Asia Pacific dominates the global video surveillance market, contributing to XX% share in 2018, and is expected to remain dominant throughout the forecast period. This is mainly due to China's dominance in video surveillance penetration, increasing investment in enhancing public security, and building security surveillance in other developing countries in the Asia Pacific region.
