Abstracts

The Indian fertilizer sector has played an imperative role in the growth of agriculture, the backbone of Indian Economy which holds its relative importance for more than a billion people. The fertilizer sector by enhancing the agricultural productivity has in turn resulted in providing a major support to the farmers who are primarily dependent on agriculture. Fertilizers have also played a pivotal role in India's food Security. For the Indian government, food has been the primary objective owing to its huge population. In India, therefore the fertilizer industry has wielded immense influence, like no other sectors in India. To cater to the needs of the individual, government's top priority has been towards production of food grain. Since the poor farmers could not afford to buy expensive fertilizing agents, the government's interventionist policy helped in providing the farmers fertilizers at a reasonable cost. Government formulated the Retention Price-Cum Subsidy scheme which has been a major impetus for the fertilizer industry since 1977 to 1992.
