Abstracts

The Asia Pacific Canned Legumes Market would witness market growth of 7.6% CAGR during the forecast period (2020-2026).

Beans are a common source of nutritional value and one of the most commonly planted species in the world. Instant food, however, has taken the food industry by storm, and food packaging turns out to be one of the lucrative businesses in the food and beverage industry. The increase in consumption of processed canned beans has brought modern consumer demands and industrially processed beans great attention.

In addition, canned beans can be a good substitute for the preparation of dry packaged beans consisting of solids and liquids called brine that increase sodium content when eaten in minute quantities. In addition, the consumption of dried beans develops good nutritional quality and minimizes health risks. Nevertheless, many consumers are not familiar with the concept of dried beans.

Canned beans are also dry beans that contain a high proportion of starch, fiber, vitamins, and minerals. Beans are culinary in origin and can provide viable alternatives to meet consumer demand worldwide, thus adding value to food and reducing cooking time. For canned beans, the nutrient composition primarily involves products without sodium and fat prior to cooking. Rates for canned beans, on a commercial basis, is largely based on the level of nutrients.

Legumes comprise all kinds of beans and peas of the Fabaceae (or Leguminosae) botanical family. There are thousands of different kinds of legumes. There are two types of chickpea differentiated by their size, shape, and color. Kabul chickpeas, known for their nutty taste, are round and white to cream in color. Australia is the world's leading exporter of chickpea, primarily desi chickpea, to India. Production in Australia has grown in recent years, and so has demanded from India for this product.

Based on Product, the market is segmented into Beans, Chickpeas, Peas and Other Products. Based on Distribution Channel, the market is segmented into Offline and Online.
