Abstracts

A modular data center is an approach to designs the data centers by incorporating contained units, often in the form of prefabricated modules. Businesses need a system that is fast and compatible with existing infrastructure. The low deployment time of modular data centers is a significant advantage to any business. The adoption and deployment time is very small as compared to the traditional methods; therefore, the risk of lost time injuries and common physical and mechanical based hazards are mitigated. Compatibility issues do not arise, as all the components are shipped by a single vendor. Some of these data centers come with pre-loaded application/virtualization software. The biggest challenge witnessed by the data center operators is the need for scaling up data center architecture whenever the need arises. With the adoption of modular data centers, the challenged is addressed quite efficiently, as the modular data centers have prefabricated modules which easily address the needs and also additionally with a fast deployment timeframe.

Based on the components, the Modular Data Center market is segmented into Functional Module Solutions and Services. The Functional Module Solutions is segmented into Individual Functional Module and All-In-One Functional Module. The Services market is segmented into Professional and Managed Services. Based on the Data Center Sizes, the market is segmented into Mid-Sized, Large Size, and Enterprise. The verticals covered under the report include BFSI, Government, Energy & Utilities, Healthcare, Manufacturing, Retail, Telecom & IT, Education, and Others.
