Abstracts

The Europe Hydrotherapy Equipment Market would witness market growth of 4% CAGR during the forecast period (2020-2026).

Classic hydrotherapy is usually performed by patients who are stationary in the bath, soaking and relaxing in warm water. This is what we call stationary passive exercises and immersion. These treatments may involve the use of medicinal herbs, underwater massages, and underwater joint manipulation. In contemporary hydrotherapy thinking, these procedures are still perceived as passive as the patient gets treatment instead of the patient playing an active role in their recovery.

In inactive hydrotherapy, patients take an active part in their recovery. This means that they perform their exercises under the supervision of a therapist. The therapist can then tell patients to perform a number of exercises in the water, such as walking exercises, countercurrent resistance, and many others. In fact, there is no limit to the number of exercises and games that can be performed in the pool. The most striking feature of active hydrotherapy is that it is fun and relaxing. This has a very positive effect on the brain and the outcome of the rehabilitation program.

The weightlessness that the person feels underwater relieves tension in their limbs, supporting aching muscles and easing movement as opposed to when on land. In addition, hydrotherapy induces the release of endorphins, serving as a strong pain killer that further decreases muscle pain. Being immersed in warm or hot water increases body temperature, increases blood flow around the circulatory system, and reduces pain.

Improved circulation can, in turn, help heal weakened tissues and rehabilitate damaged muscles or joints. Increased blood supply and movement of white blood cells across the body make it possible for lymph (an immune system fluid that serves to collect and remove unwanted materials from the body) to move more efficiently around the body and thus strengthens the immune system, helping to fight colds and illnesses.
