Abstracts

The Europe Workplace Stress Management Market would witness market growth of 7.7% CAGR during the forecast period (2019-2025).

Work-related stress (WRS) is the second most common occupational health problem in the European Union, after back pain, affecting 28 percent of EU workers. WRS can be triggered by psychosocial problems such as task design, structure, and management, like high job demands and low job control, and problems like bullying and workplace abuse. Even physical hazards like noise and temperature can cause WRS. Stress at work is common across Europe. Low job control among citizens is a major source of stress along with negative geopolitical conditions that threaten stability issues in Europe. According to the World Health Organization, in Europe, almost 83 million people are affected annually by mental disorders among the adult population of Europe (aged 18-65), with female rates higher than males.

As more businesses understand the impact of the wellness of workers on the performance of corporations, more employers have incorporated various physical activities into their corporate wellness programs. Yoga has long been known to provide many mental and physical benefits and is finding its way into the workforce increasingly. Yoga poses and meditation will help to clear this mental clutter away, helping the workers become more alert, concentrated, and efficient. Yoga also enhances the distribution of blood within the brain and increases brain function. In addition, yoga and meditation can teach employees to have a directed, focused mind.

The stigma surrounding mental disorders such as stress and anxiety are being slowly busted. This has standardized drug consumption and stress relief treatments. Therefore, the global market for stress management in the workplace is expected to pursue a lucrative path of development in the years ahead. The Medical Fraternity focuses on the development of core segments to address mental health problems.
