Abstracts

The Global Application Gateway Market size is expected to reach $3.3 billion by 2025, rising at a market growth of 10.6% CAGR during the forecast period.

Trends, such as enhanced demand for protected networks and development in a multitude of application-layer attacks, are boosting and strengthening the application gateway market. Organizations adopt application gateway solutions for the protection of their network application layer. The advancement of data security solutions and the related benefits for all potential customers have defined the evolution. Application gateway providers try to simplify things so that companies can safeguard critical information and protect the company from future attacks.

An application gateway is an application program that operates between two networks on a firewall system, also recognized as an application proxy or application-level proxy. If a customer program connects to an application gateway or proxy, it links to destination service. In order to communicate with target service the client will negotiate with the proxy server. In fact, the proxy connects to the destination behind the firewall and acts for the customer to cover and protect computers behind the firewall on the web. This creates two connections: one between a proxy server and the client and the other between a proxy server and the target. When connected, all packet forwarding decisions are made by the proxy. Since all communication is carried out via the proxy server, firewall computers are protected.
