Abstracts

In-memory analytics is a business intelligence (BI) technology that is used in solving complex and time-sensitive business challenges. The technology works by significantly increasing the speed, performance and reliability of the data. Business Intelligence is typically deployed on physical disks, and is generally disk-based. Contrarily, the in-memory analytics has queries and data residing in the server's random access memory (RAM). The 64-bit architectures led to the adoption of In-memory analytics, with the capability of handling more memory and large file sizes. The adoption of In-memory analytics significantly contributes to improved memory usage, resulting in improved speed of a BI system. The superior performance offers business-intelligence at a faster rate compared to traditional disk-based business intelligence. Digital transformation leading to the use of real-time analytics, superlative computing power, and rising adoption of self-service Business Intelligence (BI) tools have contributed to the growth of the market, globally.
