Abstracts

The Global Intra gastric Balloon Market size is expected to reach $77.5 Million by 2026, rising at a market growth of 12.4% CAGR during the forecast period. Intra gastric balloons are gastric balloons made of soft biocompatible silicone material which is usually filled with sterile saline solutions or gas. These are implanted into non-surgical endoscopic procedures inside the stomach. When inflated, an intra gastric balloon will reduce the volume of the stomach which makes a person feel fuller faster and longer. It also helps to minimize food consumption.

This procedure is an alternative for overweight and obese individuals with an index of body mass (BMI) ranging from 30 to 70 who are not eligible for weight-loss operations. Permanent healthy diet and exercise changes are necessary to ensure the intra gastric balloon procedure is a success. The main advantage of this technique is that it helps avoid the complications associated with surgical procedures. Nevertheless, few disadvantages are that not all patients tolerate it, and the possibility of nausea and vomiting. These balloons can also result in weight loss failure if a patient does not adhere to diet and exercise.

A growing trend found on the market is the approval for this medical device by regulatory bodies such as the FDA in the US and its associated treatment followed by the American Society for Metabolic and Bariatric Surgery's acceptance nod. These approvals will likely also be replicated in other countries which will be a positive factor for the Intra gastric Balloons industry as their application becomes more standardized.

Intragastric balloons have been used progressively in the treatment of obesity and to induce weight loss. Numerous upgrades and technological advances were made in order to achieve optimum results and to reduce the associated complications. Various intragastric balloons have been approved for sale in Europe and South America. Vendors' growing concentration on technical developments, which is one of the key intragastric balloon industry trends, will also drive market growth. Different leading vendors concentrate on improving the capabilities and performance of intragastric balloon devices. The manufacturers also focus on balloon volume changes and longer implantation time.
