Abstracts

The Global Log Management Market size is expected to reach $3.3 billion by 2025, rising at a market growth of 11.2% CAGR during the forecast period. Log management is a compilation of processes and techniques to facilitate and administer the generation, transmission, analysis, storage, archiving and reporting of enormous volumes of log data that is generated within a system or network; These logs are also called as audit trails, audit records, and event logs, and are generated by software stack components like servers, networks, containers, cloud infrastructure, application infrastructure, apps, message bus, load balancers, and so on.

An increase in the sophistication of Advanced Persistent Threats (APTs) drives the demand for log management solutions across different industries. Furthermore, the proliferation of cloud-based log management platforms that extend the availability of computer-generated log data accessible to IT engineers, developers and on-demand business analysis also provides a boost to market demand. Also, an increased number of networks and IoT devices is projected to fuel the market growth. Nonetheless, the lack of open-source log management solutions impedes log market growth. In addition, responsive log management systems integrated with artificial intelligence and analytical advantages or features are anticipated to create substantial opportunities for log management market revenues to grow.

The demand for log-management software is expected to implement substantial opportunities over the forecast period. Due to advancements in technology and the use of computing resources, large corporate organizations are projected to have increasing storage and processing needs. It is presumed that rapid development of enterprise IT infrastructure will increase the data. Therefore, the need for data auditing methods to be reassessed and standardized keeps coming up.
