Abstracts

The Global Payment Monitoring Market size is expected to reach $24.5 billion by 2026, rising at a market growth of 29.7% CAGR during the forecast period. Payment monitoring is a solution provided to businesses willing to reduce the possibility of default within the payment plan. Since the time of issue of the invoice, the technology initiates proactive initiatives to strengthen the inflow of receivables. The ability of a company to incorporate an accurate comprehensive payment management program is essential for the survival of its industry. It's the secret to figuring out how the organization is performing.

Financial institutions must comply with the various AML, CFT and KYC legislation in the sense of customer onboarding processes. According to the rules, financial institutions must monitor their new customers. Such checks will be carried out in order to comply with the Anti-Money Laundering (AML) and Know Your Customer (KYC) regulations. Financial companies are responsible for meeting the criteria of AML, KYC and CDD.

Financial organizations that do not take the requisite steps to lose their credibility as well.

In order to address the need for financial inclusion, there has been a rapid expansion of new technology and developments that are helping to make it more economically feasible for banks to access 'unbanked' or 'underbanked' populations. Technology has moved from branch banking to e-banking and now mobile money, which has helped to build pockets of power even among the least financially inclusive countries. With the cost of servicing customers considerably lower for automated teller machines (ATMs), interactive voice response (IVRs), mobile and online banking, these alternative banking platforms have seen a huge increase.

Payment monitoring solutions are of great benefit to organizations; however, they involve skilled and trained professionals with specific experience in analytical and critical thought and financial expertise. There is currently a lack of professional software developers, such as statisticians, conscientious hackers, data analysts, and computer scientists. Nevertheless, a number of education initiatives are being introduced across various countries to train machine learning and analytical professionals. This will help people learn more about analytics and machine learning, which would help develop payment monitoring solutions and contribute to market growth monitoring of payments.
