Abstracts

Unified Threat Management (UTM) is a consolidated security solution with features such as network firewalling, gateway antivirus, gateway anti-spam, VPN, load balancing, data leak prevention, content filtering and on-appliance reporting. These features have substantial value proposition for organizations. The demand for UTM's witnessed an upsurge in the last decade due to exemplary security features. Small organizations were a soft target for service providers, as the technology was relatively inexpensive and easily deployable. However, over the years, the UTM solutions have gained mass acceptance among enterprises due to its scalable and agile features, capable of reducing energy consumption and enhancing IT productivity.

Unified Threat Management (UTM) solutions come with wide range of network protection protocols that protect networks from both external and internal threats. UTM's are easily deployable by enterprises and have user friendly architecture. In addition, UTM's are a cost effective solution with a combination of standalone security tools with a single management console; therefore, take less space, save cost and energy consumption. Integration is one of the powerful features of a Unified Threat Management solution. Typically, a UTM solution can be integrated with standard network configuration methodologies and technology standards. The other associated benefits of UTM Solutions are ease of deployment, added simplicity, troubleshooting ease, reduced complexity and better performance.
