Abstracts

The North America Dental Practice Management Software Market would witness market growth of 9.23% CAGR during the forecast period (2019-2025).

Developing and marketing more user-friendly updated versions of existing software is expected to boost demand over the coming years. For example, DentiMax, Inc. launched the 18th edition of its flagship software for dental practice management in November 2017. DentiMax 18 is more efficient, graphical and smoother than older versions with new paperless enhancements. Cloud-based partnerships and acquisitions are projected to grow the cloud-based software market. For example, collaboration with Advanced Dental Management (ADM) was announced in December 2017 by Planet DDS, a cloud-based software provider in the U.S. Through this partnership, through a web browser, ADM acquired a global view of practice operations, consolidated reporting, and access to information anywhere. Denticon, Planet DDS software, is popular across the U.S. as a scalable, efficient, cloud-based practice management platform.

Web-based dental practice management is accessed exclusively through a web browser and there is no software installed or needed on the device of the user. All data and applications are remotely stored and accessed via the internet. It is one of the main benefits of web-based dental practice management software. And the web-based software is the most used in the current market environment, but the cloud-based software is projected to rise in the near future. The significant differences between the web-based patient portal model and the cloud-based model are the application's use of specific instances in the web-based model, while the model offered is centralized for all customers in the cloud-based model. Moreover, unlike the cloud-based model segment, the key factor impeding the growth of the network-based model segment is that it only
