Abstracts

Malaysia canned food market is estimated to be valued at US$151.321 million in 2018 and is expected to grow further in the coming years. The foods which are first processed and then preserved by sealing in an airtight container to extend the shelf life of the product are called canned foods. As there is an increase in the disposable income and change in food preferences many consumers are preferring canned foods which will play a role in increasing its demand hence augmenting the market growth. Moreover, canned foods have high nutritious value and require less preparation time, this factor will also play a role in boosting the market growth. Additionally, increasing participation by international key players in the country with new product launches and investments is also poised to boost the canned food market in the coming years.
