Abstracts

The South America material handling market is estimated to grow from US$6.004 billion in 2019 to US$7.645 billion by 2025, at a CAGR of 4.11% over the forecast period. Brazil will witness the fastest growth rate over the forecast period. Rising demand for staples, due to rapid urbanization and population growth in the region is one of the factors boosting the demand for material handling solutions. An increase in labor cost and the upswing in manufacturing and construction activity are other factors contributing to the growth of this market. There has also been significant progress in the pharmaceutical industry due to the aging population and has created the need for more bulk material handling machines for product containment and feeding reactors, thereby providing a great opportunity for material handling vendors. However, the high initial investment will restrain the growth of this industry in the region over the forecast period.
