Annual, Quarterly & Regional Sales Insights On Lymphoma Antibodies

In last few years, remarkable progress has been made in the field of immunotherapy. Multiple immunotherapeutic approaches based on different targeting mechanism have emerged as standard treatment methodologies for the management of wide range of cancers, including lymphoma. Amid all approaches, antibody based immunotherapy is considered as main component of lymphoma therapy, alongside surgery, radiation, and chemotherapy. This is mainly attributed to several benefits associated with them in terms of specificity, selectivity, and targetability.

To date, several monoclonal antibodies have been approved for the management of lymphoma including Rituximab, Monjuvi, Keytruda, and others which have shown high adoption rates in the market. To further enhance their efficacy, researchers have developed antibody drug conjugates. Currently, three antibody drug conjugates namely Polivy, Adcetris, and Zynlonta have gained approval for the management of lymphoma. Since the entrance of these drugs, these have shown high adoption rates in the global market which has led to further research and development activities in this domain. Presently, more than 200 clinical trials are ongoing in global lymphoma antibody therapeutics market.

The advancement in the field of biotechnology and the robust research and development activities has led to introduction of next generation antibodies which are designed to be more potent and specific than conventional monoclonal antibodies. Although no bispecific antibody has entered the market, but it is suggested that it will hold a significant share in the forthcoming years which can be justified by the large number of ongoing clinical trials in this domain. For instance, Epcoritamab developed by Genmab's proprietary DuoBody technology is an investigational IgG1-bispecific antibody which is present in phase-I/II clinical trial. The preliminary results have demonstrated encouraging response in the management of relapsed/ refractory large B cell lymphoma.

The global lymphoma antibody therapeutics market is highly competitive and consists of several key players including Roche, Pfizer, ADC Therapeutics, Bristol Myers Squibb, and others. The companies have adopted strategic alliances including partnership, collaboration, or joint ventures to maintain their position in the global market. Recently in 2021, Xencor and Janssen Biotech announced an exclusive collaboration and worldwide license agreement to develop and commercialize plamotamab and novel XmAb® B-cell targeting bispecific antibodies which are designed to conditionally activate T cells through the CD28 co-stimulatory receptor. The investigational Plamotamab is a XmAb bispecific antibody which targets CD20 and CD3 simultaneously. The drug is completing a Phase 1 dose-escalation study in patients with CD20-expressing non-Hodgkin lymphoma. Under the terms of the agreement, Janssen will receive worldwide exclusive development and commercialization rights to plamotamab, whether as a monotherapy or in combination regimens.

As per our report findings, the global lymphoma antibody therapeutics market is expected to surpass US$ 6 Billion by 2028. The global lymphoma antibody therapeutics market is set to witness an impressive growth, primarily due to high unmet clinical needs associated with the disease and emerging product launches. The NHL antibody therapeutics market is the major market among global lymphoma therapeutics market. The promising drug pipeline and evolving treatment patterns are the factors that would largely drive the market growth. Rising prevalence of lymphoma, increasing funding from different governments, growing awareness and accelerated approvals offered by the regulatory authorities are the other factors that would propel the market growth.
