About

Russia is the most populated country in the European region with a population of 144million. The country has 12 cities, where population is more than a million. The presenceof a significant population base makes Russia one of the most favored nations forconducting clinical trials. Russia boasts of a highly centralized healthcare system withmajority of the patients concentrated in specialized hospitals and large tertiary centres,which is ideal for clinical trial recruitment. Totally, there are 10,000 hospitals in Russia,with a high ratio of physicians to per 1000 patients. Consequently, the country hasrecorded high rates of clinical trial productivity (close to 10 times more than in the USA orthe EU regions).

Attributing to the new legislation introduced in September, 2010 (On Circulation ofMedicines, which requires the companies to conduct clinical trials in Russia prior toregistering their new drugs), the Russian clinical trials market is poised for significantgrowth. The combination of lower costs, lower regulatory hurdles, and increased publicand private investment drive the growth in the clinical trials industry in Russia.
