Abstracts

The global Compound Ketoconazole Cream market size is predicted to grow from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of % from 2026 to 2032.

Compound ketoconazole cream is a topical antifungal ointment that combines ketoconazole (a broad-spectrum antifungal ingredient) with clobetasol propionate (a potent corticosteroid). It is mainly used to treat various superficial fungal skin infections, such as tinea manuum, tinea pedis, tinea corporis, tinea cruris, pityriasis versicolor (pityriasis versicolor), and Malassezia folliculitis. It can effectively kill or inhibit fungi, while the steroid component can quickly relieve inflammatory symptoms such as itching and redness.

In 2024, the global production of compound ketoconazole cream was 68.45 million units, with an average price of US$0.77 per unit. The gross profit margin was approximately between 45% and 65%.

The upstream supply chain of compound ketoconazole cream mainly involves raw material suppliers, including ketoconazole, corticosteroids, or anti-inflammatory ingredients, as well as cream base, surfactants, stabilizers, and packaging materials. Upstream concentration is relatively high, and raw material costs are affected by fluctuations in chemical prices, environmental policies, and pharmacopoeia standards, but overall supply remains stable. The downstream supply chain is more crucial, with users including hospital dermatology departments, primary healthcare institutions, retail pharmacies, and online drug retail platforms. Compound preparations are mostly used for fungal skin diseases accompanied by inflammation, itching, or secondary infections, and their clinical use is relatively widespread, but also subject to greater regulatory scrutiny. Hospital demand is influenced by prescribing habits, availability of alternative drugs, and policy controls; retail demand depends on consumers' need for rapid symptom relief, brand awareness, and pharmacist recommendations. Because compound products can relieve inflammation and itching in the short term, consumer acceptance is high, but awareness of hormone-related risks is increasing, leading to more cautious use in some markets, requiring brands to invest more in end-user education and usage guidelines.

Future development will continue the trend of dermatological self-management and expansion of OTC channels, while also being influenced by stricter regulations and standardized medication use. Driving factors stem from the prevalence of coexisting fungal infections and skin inflammation in clinical settings, giving combination preparations the advantage of rapid symptom relief. Increased skin barrier problems in urban populations, as well as the rise in fungal infections related to hot and humid environments and sports, also drive demand. However, significant obstacles are also present, including public concerns about hormone use, increased standardized requirements from physicians for combination preparations, and intensified competition from alternatives such as single-agent antifungals and non-steroidal anti-inflammatory products. Furthermore, stricter regulations on hormone-containing combination preparations in some countries and regions may limit their promotion.
