The global Academic Translation market size is predicted to grow from US$ 9748 million in 2025 to US$ 15700 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 7.1% from 2026 to 2032.

Academic translation refers to the accurate, professional, and academically compliant conversion of high-knowledge-density content such as research papers, academic journal articles, research reports, patent documents, textbooks, dissertations, and conference materials between different languages. Its core involves not only language conversion but also terminology standardization, restoration of subject-specific context, preservation of logical structure, and optimization of expression to conform to the target journal or educational system. Therefore, it is a highly specialized sub-field of language services, typically requiring translators with specific subject backgrounds or a combination of AI and human proofreading.

The academic translation industry is expected to experience steady growth, primarily driven by the increasing internationalization of global scientific research, cross-border academic collaborations, and the continued improvement in research output from non-English speaking countries. With increasing research investment in China, India, Europe, and East Asian countries, a large number of research results need to be published in international English journals or disseminated across languages, significantly increasing the demand for professional translation. While AI-assisted translation technology is improving efficiency, high-quality academic content still heavily relies on human polishing and proofreading by domain experts, making a hybrid 'machine + expert' model the mainstream development direction for the industry. In the future, the industry will further evolve towards specialization, subject-specific specialization, and platform-based services.

LPI (LP Information)' newest research report, the 'Academic Translation Industry Forecast' looks at past sales and reviews total world Academic Translation sales in 2025, providing a comprehensive analysis by region and market sector of projected Academic Translation sales for 2026 through 2032.
