Alginate silver dressings are high-end medical wound dressings that combine alginate fibers with silver ions. Using alginate as a matrix, they form a hydrophilic gel after absorbing wound exudate, while continuously releasing silver ions to exert broad-spectrum antibacterial effects. They are characterized by high absorbency, hemostasis promotion, antibacterial and infection prevention, and painless dressing changes, making them suitable for moderate to severe exudative wounds.

Upstream industries mainly include companies engaged in the cultivation and harvesting of brown algae and other seaweed raw materials, alginate extraction and purification processors, silver ion material suppliers, and non-woven fabric substrate manufacturers. Downstream industries cover wound care centers in hospitals at all levels, chronic disease management institutions, community health service stations, and retail pharmacies, reaching end users through medical device bidding, pharmaceutical distribution companies, and e-commerce platforms. The global unit price of alginate silver dressings is US$19.84 per dressing, with annual sales of approximately 16.02 million dressings and a global annual production capacity of 20 million dressings. The industry profit margin is 23%.
