Ambulance Cleaning Service is a highly specialized infection control process that provides systematic and standardized cleaning, disinfection, and sterilization services for the interior of ambulances and their equipment. Its core objective is to thoroughly eliminate potential pathogens (such as bacteria, viruses, blood, and bodily fluids), break the chain of iatrogenic infection transmission, and ensure patient transport safety and the occupational health of healthcare workers. The service strictly adheres to medical disinfection standards, uses medical-grade disinfectants, and implements differentiated treatment for areas with different contamination risks. It often includes proper waste disposal and verification of cleaning effectiveness. This service is an indispensable and crucial component of the pre-hospital emergency care quality and infection prevention and control system.

Ambulance cleaning services vary considerably globally, with routine cleaning services costing between $50 and $200, while deep cleaning or terminal disinfection for infectious diseases can exceed $500. Core costs include specialized disinfectants, medical-grade supplies, labor, and waste disposal. The industry typically boasts high profit margins, ranging from 40% to 60%, primarily due to stringent operating procedures and technological premiums.
