American ginseng instant tea is an instant beverage produced through modern food processing techniques (such as extraction, concentration, and granulation). Its core function is to provide consumers with a convenient, efficient, and dose-standardized way to consume ginseng, addressing the problems in traditional ginseng consumption methods (such as slicing and stewing, grinding and mixing) including time-consuming and labor-intensive processes, unstable release of active ingredients, poor taste, and difficulty in carrying. The upstream process mainly involves the cultivation, harvesting, primary processing (washing, drying), and standardized extraction and concentration of ginseng; the downstream process covers the formulation development, flavor blending, granulation and shaping, packaging design, and final sales to end consumers through brand marketing and online/offline channels (such as supermarkets, pharmacies, and e-commerce platforms). The output of American ginseng instant tea is approximately 500 tons in 2025, with an average price of about 800 US dollars per kilogram and a gross profit margin of about 50%. The single production line capacity is 10 tons per year.
