An anchor shackle is a fitting attached to the end of wires or ropes.

Typically, anchor shackles consist of a U-shaped metal body and a bolt pin attached to that body. The U-shaped body is made of sturdy metal and serves to support heavy loads or forces. The bolt pin is a component used to close the opening of the U-shaped body, securely holding the load in place. It is usually secured to the body using nuts and washers, preventing the shackle from coming off when the load is in motion.

Anchor shackles are used not only for attaching ship anchors but also for various cargo handling operations, lifting heavy objects, and securing loads.
