Anti-sexual harassment training is a workplace compliance training service offered to enterprises, government agencies, schools, hospitals, social organizations, and other employers. Its core purpose is to help employees, supervisors, management, HR personnel, and complaint handlers identify, prevent, report, and handle workplace sexual harassment and related retaliatory behaviors. This type of training is typically delivered through online courses, LMS course libraries, mobile micro-courses, video scenario courses, live/offline instructor training, blended training, policy acceptance, and training record management. Content covers modules such as legal definitions, behavioral boundaries, typical cases, complaint channels, managerial responsibilities, bystander intervention, anti-retaliation requirements, investigation processes, employee rights, and employer obligations. It primarily serves employers' compliance requirements, organizational culture building, employment risk control, and the creation of a safe employee environment.

From a product roadmap perspective, the industry is shifting from traditional video courses and PPT instructor training to contextualized, interactive, role-based, and data-driven approaches. Leading vendors are increasingly emphasizing tiered courses for employees and managers, multi-state/multi-country compliance modules, bystander intervention, online harassment, digital communication scenarios such as Slack/Teams, remote work boundaries, retaliation prevention, complaint handling, and managerial responsibility. The competitive focus for large platforms is no longer just course compliance, but rather the ability to quickly update courses, integrate with enterprise

LMS and HRIS systems, provide completion rate and certificate records, support multi-language, multi-region, and multi-role deployments, and use data to help companies identify organizational culture risks. In the future, AI-assisted course localization, automatic regulatory updates, personalized learning paths, scenario simulations, and compliance evidence retention will become the main directions for leading platforms to increase average order value and customer loyalty.
