ATBF Antibiotic-Free Product Certification Service refers to a third-party testing, auditing, verification, and labeling program that certifies food, meat, poultry, dairy, aquaculture, eggs, and related products as free from antibiotics based on laboratory residue testing, livestock management audits, supply-chain documentation, and compliance with defined regulatory or voluntary standards, enabling producers and brands to demonstrate antibiotic-free claims for retail, export, consumer-trust building, and regulatory assurance.

The ATBF antibiotic-free certification industry chain begins upstream with laboratories, reagent suppliers, testing kits, auditing protocols, veterinary compliance criteria, and digital traceability system providers; midstream consists of accredited certification bodies, testing labs, auditing firms, and verification service providers who assess farms, processing facilities, product samples, supply-chain records, and label-use compliance; downstream, farms, processors, retailers, exporters, and consumer brands apply certified antibiotic-free labeling to improve market positioning, meet regulatory or retailer requirements, gain consumer trust, and access premium pricing, supported by surveillance programs, renewal audits, marketing approval, and compliance monitoring.

Global initiatives include expansion of antibiotic-free certification capacity in North America and Europe driven by retailer mandates, development of government-supported antibiotic-reduction verification programs in the EU, UK, and Canada, new certification rollout for poultry and aquaculture producers in China, Vietnam, India, and Southeast Asia, private-label certification frameworks under development for supermarket chains in the Middle East and Latin America, and technology-driven traceability platforms integrating antibiotic-free verification with blockchain tracking planned for 2025–2028, alongside increased laboratory infrastructure investments and cross-standard harmonization programs.
