Baby care cameras are a type of intelligent video device specifically designed for infant sleep monitoring, daily care, and safety management. Through functions such as high-definition image acquisition, night vision, sound detection, cry recognition, motion tracking, temperature and humidity monitoring, two-way voice communication, and motion alerts, parents can remotely observe their baby's status in real time, improving the safety and convenience of family childcare. These products typically feature Wi-Fi or local wireless transmission technology and are managed via an app or independent display screen. Some high-end models integrate AI recognition to monitor safety events such as breathing rate, rolling over risk, coverage obstruction, and leaving the bed. The upstream of baby care cameras includes core components such as lens modules, CMOS imaging sensors, infrared lights, microphones and speakers, Wi-Fi/Bluetooth/local wireless chips, main control SoC, plastic and metal structural parts, temperature and humidity sensors, power adapters and lithium batteries. The main suppliers come from the fields of optical modules, sensors, wireless chips and consumer electronics materials. Midstream manufacturers are responsible for overall system design, AI algorithm development (cry recognition, motion recognition, breathing detection), system integration, APP development, cloud storage services, and wireless
