The baseball catcher's mitt in baseball is designed differently than gloves for other positions on the field. They are thicker and larger in most cases, making them able to catch a baseball at its highest speeds. A catcher's mitt is similar to a baseball glove in the sense that they are both used for the same purpose. Catcher's mitts are mainly used to catch pitches, the occasional pop-up, and tag out runners attempting to cross home plate. They are extremely important to have as a catcher because catching a baseball with bare hands can cause serious injury, especially when that baseball is a 95 mph fastball delivered from a pitcher.
