The BBU (Baseband Unit) cabinet is a piece of equipment in the wireless communication system and is usually used in mobile communication base stations. The BBU cabinet is mainly responsible for processing digital signal processing and baseband signal processing of the base station, and sending the processed signals to the radio frequency unit (Remote Radio Unit, RRU) for transmitting and receiving radio frequency signals. The BBU cabinet usually contains components such as digital signal processors, baseband processors, modems, and clock synchronization modules, which are used to implement functions such as digital signal processing, modulation and demodulation, and clock synchronization. The BBU cabinet and the RRU are connected through optical fibers or cables to realize the transmission and processing of baseband signals and radio frequency signals. The BBU cabinet plays an important role in the mobile communication base station and is one of the key equipment in the wireless communication system. Through the digital signal processing and baseband signal processing of the BBU cabinet, functions such as modulation and demodulation, encoding and decoding, and channel allocation of mobile communication signals can be realized, thereby ensuring the normal operation and communication quality of the communication system.
