Big Data Development Service refers to a set of specialised software-engineering and data-engineering services that design, implement and operate platforms and applications capable of ingesting, storing, processing and analysing very large, fast and diverse data sets—the classic “three Vs” of big data: volume, velocity and variety. These services encompass the full lifecycle from requirements analysis and feasibility study, through architecture and technology selection (data lakes, lakehouses, real-time streaming, batch warehouses), to the development and deployment of pipelines, data platforms and analytical applications. Typical big data development engagements include building data ingestion layers for structured, semi-structured and unstructured data; implementing batch and streaming processing with frameworks such as Hadoop, Spark, Flink or Kafka; designing scalable storage layers on cloud and on-premise infrastructure; integrating NoSQL and distributed databases; and exposing curated data through APIs, BI tools and machine-learning workflows.
