Biomarker Service refers to a comprehensive suite of scientific and technical offerings that support the discovery, development, validation, and application of biomarkers in biomedical research and clinical practice. Biomarkers are measurable indicators of biological processes, disease states, or responses to therapeutic interventions, and they play a crucial role in personalized medicine, diagnostics, and drug development. Biomarker services typically include assay development, analytical validation, sample testing, data interpretation, and regulatory support, often utilizing advanced platforms such as genomics, proteomics, metabolomics, and digital health technologies. These services are essential for identifying predictive, prognostic, diagnostic, or pharmacodynamic biomarkers that help researchers and clinicians make informed decisions about patient care and treatment efficacy. Used widely by pharmaceutical companies, contract research organizations, academic institutions, and diagnostic developers, biomarker services accelerate the path from research to clinical application by ensuring reliable and actionable biological data.
