Abstracts

The global Canine Stifle Braces market size is predicted to grow from US$ 23.38 million in 2025 to US$ 41.35 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 8.5% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, global sales volume of canine stifle braces reached approximately 114.5 K Sets, with an average selling price of about US$208.7/Set. Canine stifle braces are externally worn veterinary orthopedic devices designed according to the anatomy and movement characteristics of a dog's hind-limb stifle joint. They improve joint stability through compression, containment, motion restriction, structural support, and biomechanical guidance. These products are commonly constructed from elastic fabrics, neoprene, thermoplastic materials, support stays, mechanical hinges, fastening straps, and cushioning liners, and are available as standard-sized, measurement-based, cast-based, or digitally scanned custom-made devices. Their primary functions are to limit abnormal joint displacement, reduce stress on injured ligaments and articular surfaces, maintain an appropriate range of flexion and extension, and improve stability during standing, walking, and rehabilitation. They are mainly used for cranial cruciate ligament injuries, stifle instability, patellar disorders, degenerative joint conditions, and preoperative or postoperative rehabilitation support.

Market growth is primarily supported by rising pet healthcare expenditure, the aging dog population, and greater diagnosis of stifle joint disorders. Cranial cruciate ligament injuries, patellar instability, and osteoarthritis are common among older and medium-to-large dogs, while some animals are not immediate surgical candidates because of age, anesthesia risk, treatment cost, or recovery considerations. This is increasing the use of braces in conservative management and rehabilitation. Advances in 3D scanning, digital modeling, lightweight materials, and additive manufacturing are also improving fit, comfort, and delivery efficiency, while the expansion of veterinary rehabilitation centers, animal orthotics providers, and online pet healthcare channels is increasing product
