Abstracts

The global Caprylic Acid Supplements market size is predicted to grow from US$ 1219 million in 2025 to US$ 1761 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.5% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2024, global production of Caprylic acid supplements reached approximately 148 million units, with an average global market price of around USD 8 per unit. Caprylic acid supplements are dietary products containing caprylic acid, a medium-chain fatty acid (MCFA) naturally found in coconut oil, palm kernel oil, and dairy products, known for its antimicrobial, anti-inflammatory, and energy-boosting properties. These supplements are commonly used to support digestive health by combating harmful bacteria, yeast (such as Candida), and fungi in the gut, while also promoting healthy gut flora balance. Additionally, because MCFAs are quickly metabolized into energy rather than stored as fat, caprylic acid supplements are popular among individuals seeking improved energy levels, weight management support, and enhanced cognitive function, making them a niche but growing part of the nutritional supplement market.

The market for caprylic acid supplements is primarily driven by the rising consumer demand for natural and functional health products that support gut health, immunity, and overall wellness. Increasing awareness of the role of medium-chain fatty acids in managing conditions like Candida overgrowth, digestive disorders, and inflammation has boosted adoption among health-conscious consumers. Additionally, the growth of ketogenic and low-carb diets, which emphasize MCFAs for quick energy and metabolic support, has expanded the appeal of caprylic acid supplements in the sports nutrition and weight management sectors. The broader shift toward plant-based and natural alternatives, coupled with growing distribution through e-commerce and health retail channels, further strengthens market demand worldwide.
